

The elegorake has very thick, black fur all over its arms, legs, and most of its torso. This fur is very important for keeping the beast warm on cold nights while sleeping. It is also good for cuddling and warming baby elegorakes when their young fur is still thin.

Note the "opposable thumb"

The elegorake is a lucky creature indeed because it has hands rather than paws. Hands just like our human hand with bendable fingers that can grip things, pick things up, and use tools. Having a thumb is the key to making all these things work really well
